ABSTRACT. Case records and interviews concerning educational achievements of 1087 foster care alumni are presented. Youth were served by a voluntary agency in 23 communities across the USA between 1966 and 1998. Because the alumni were older than most foster care follow-up studies, a more extensive picture of educational achievement was possible. High school graduation and college enrolment rates were comparable to or even greater than those of the general population, but the number of ...

Abstract. Creativity is an important and widely accepted learning goal of theatre programs in higher education. Yet it appears that creativity and the act of assessing creativity as a learning outcome have received minimal attention by the community of practice and in theatre education scholarship.

Assessing Creativity as a Student Learning Outcome in ...

In assessing the achievements of the programmes, the study adopted a 'theory-based evaluation' approach, going beyond the formally stated objectives of programmes to uncover the mechanisms or theories of change underlying the design of programmes, as well as identifying the ways in which objectives were actually operationalised in practice.
