Jobs, grants, prestige and career advancement are all partially based on an admittedly flawed concept: the journal Impact Factor. Impact factors have been becoming increasingly meaningless since 1991, writes George Lozano, who finds that the variance of papers' citation rates around their journals' IF has been rising steadily.. Thomson Reuters

The impact factor of a journal is calculated by dividing the number of current year citations to the source items published in that journal during the previous two years. It is denoted as a ratio between citations and recent citable items published. You can either refer to the Journal Citation Reports (JCR) or the Scopus® database to find the impact factor of the journal.

The impact factor or journal impact factor of an academic journal is a scientometric index that reflects the yearly average number of citations that articles published in the last two years in a given journal received. It is frequently used as a proxy for the relative importance of a journal within its field; journals with higher impact factors are often deemed to be more important than those with lower ones.
